THE PLATFORM QUESTION.

The Democracy of the State of California, which is of different timber from the Democracy that was represented at the Chicago Convention in the current month, made a platform at the city of Stockton.
At Chicago the National Democracy nominated a candidate for the Presidency whose political record is an open and glaring repudiation of the Stockton platform. Of this there is no one so bold as even to suggest a doubt. It is confessed

Now this placed the Democracy of the State of California in the exceedingly awkward dilemma of professing certain political principles which their candidate for President has in his life, and his action, distinctly and boldly repudiated. When they go before the people and plead the Stockton platform, they plead a conviction of political faith to which their candidate is notoriously infidel. The existence of a platform and the nomination of a candidate serve to give emphasis to the variance of political significance between them.

Now it is equally apparent that if the Republican party in California formulate a communistic platform, it will do much in same incongruity between its platform and its candidate. Mr. Blaine has nothing in his record or his character—there is, in short, nothing in all his career, to warrant the assumption that he will give compliance to any of the destructive and radical "isms" that have so agitated the Democracy in this State, or that he will be bound by any similar declarations on the part of a Convention of his party in this State. There is not a color of communism in any part of his record.

The adoption of a communistic platform in the coming Convention, as has been demanded by some extremists whose conceptions of state-socialistic policy and the rights of citizens do not rise to the level of those entertained by Mr. Blaine, will produce, we repeat, the same repulsive deformity between political professors and the head of the ticket as is now confessed on all sides to exist in the Democratic situation. Mr. Blaine should be given heart upon that dignity, and nothing but death, a miracle or a sunstroke will keep him from it.

Says Mr. Blaine: "The law is the safeguard of established institutions, without which some short-sighted people would put upon the shoulders of the gallant standard-bearer. Nor, we repeat, is there anything else than danger in attempting the experiment. In his admirable letter, Mr. Blaine has made his own platform, and in it there is no word capable to indicate that he has any sympathy with the destructive sentiments which have made the Stockton Convention a laughing stock and a by-word, and secured for the California Democracy a contemptuous and deserved repudiation at the hands of a National Convention."

The time has passed when the people can be deceived by the system of out-did-ding in dogmatic platform declarations, and no man more clearly than Mr. Blaine sees this. Nor would he be a party to any such miserable scheme. He has determined himself that the issues he desires to bring the burning issue of the National campaign Upon the National platform the voters of the State of California can stand. There is in that platform, regarding the rights of men and of property, and the relations of men and the industries of the country and the capital dependent upon them and upon which they depend, not only which the Convention of the party in this State is called upon to add to, or take from, for the purposes of national campaign—nothing with which it can meddle, without doing the candidacy of Mr. Blaine, and the campaign of the party in this State irreparable injury.

These truths are so apparent that we cannot conceive the Convention will hazard the chances of victory by any such folly as a few impractical and selfish spirits are disposed to force upon it. As we said only the other day:

"A political platform in a Presidential campaign should be confined to the declaration of central political principles. There should be no fawning to secure the favor of this, or that other element, but a simple, nearly straightforward declaration of national political faith.

"It is unquestionably the desire of the people of this State that there shall be no further efforts to entitle the fading embodiment of prejudice and unreasoning hatred that remain to testify to the disastrous consequences that resulted to this State from former hot local contentions on questions that rightly have no place in politics, but should be left to the practical and self-possessed commercial sense of the people, and to the special form to which these people have purposely relegated them."

We repeat, let not the State Convention make the mistake of adding to or taking from the national platform.

tional political faith.

ACCEPTING THE NOMINATION FOR VICE-PRESIDENT,

And Briefly Discussing the Questions of American Labor, the Tariff, etc.

[SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE RECORD-UNION.]

WASHINGTON, July 21st. Following is Logan's letter accepting the nomination:

WASHINGTON, (D. C.), July 19, 1884.

DEAR SIR: Having received from you, on the 24th of June, the official notification of my nomination by the National Republican Convention for Vice-President of the United States, and considering it to be the duty of every man devoting himself to public service to assume any position to which he may be called by the voice of his countrymen, I accept the nomination with grateful heart and a deep sense of my responsibilities, and, if elected, shall endeavor to discharge the duties of the office to the best of my ability. The honor, as is well understood, was not sought by me.
That was tendered by the representatives of the party in a manner so flattering will serve to lighten whatever labors I may be called upon to perform.

Although the variety of subjects covered in the very excellent and vigorous declaration of principles adopted by the late Convention, which, upon an occasion calling for brevity of expression, that full elaboration of which they are susceptible, I avail myself of party usage to signify my appreciation of the various points of the platform and to discuss them briefly.

PROTECTION TO AMERICAN LABOR.

The resolution of the platform declaring that the duty of the government is to protect the labor of the nation, and to make it the chief object of its policy, is one of the most important features of the platform. The party has, however, not done justice to this important feature of the platform by failing to make it the chief object of its policy.
